2008 - 2009

The College of Physicians of Philadelphia

BIRTHPLACE OF AMERICAN MEDICINESM

FROM THE PRESIDENT AND THE DIRECTOR & CEO

The relevance of The College of Physicians of Philadelphia's historical medical collections and public health programs has never been more apparent as reflected by record-breaking visitation at the Mütter Museum, at our free lectures and online at PhillyHealthInfo.org. Increased participation by our Fellows in the multiple activities of the College has helped enliven this wonderful institution.

Although we are not immune to the ongoing recession and turmoil in the financial markets, the College has done reasonably well this past fiscal year. While our investments are down, through prudent spending and increased revenue, we did not use our credit line in FY09 and continued to operate in a prudent manner.

Thank you for helping us meet the challenge as more and more organizations and citizens turn to us for vetted information and culturally "alive" activities. Because of your support, we continue "To Advance the Cause of Health while Upholding the Ideals and Heritage of Medicine" after 223 years.

Paul C. Brucker, MD
President (FY2009 - FY2010)

ABOUT THE COLLEGE

Concentrating on the examination of medicine, healthcare and medical ethics in broad social contexts, The College of Physicians of Philadelphia is a repository for the history of medicine, an active forum for critical debate, and an interpreter and disseminator of information to legislators, policymakers, industry, and the general public.

The College of Physicians was established in 1787 by a group of medical doctors who wished to share their experiences and, thereby, "to advance the science of medicine and thereby lessen human misery." Today, the College has evolved into a non-profit educational and cultural institution dedicated to advancing the cause of health while upholding the ideals and heritage of medicine.

The College's principal programs include the F.C. Wood Institute for the History of Medicine, which incorporates scholarly programs, the Historical Medical Library, and the Mütter Museum of human anatomy, medical anomalies and medical practice. Additionally, the College's public health outreach programs include PhillyHealthInfo.org, and an extensive series of free lectures and conferences that engage the diverse communities the College serves. Each program of the College utilizes our assets and supports objectives that fulfill our goals of education and community service.

Celebrating 150 Years - Mütter Museum

SPOTLIGHT:

OUR HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS CONTINUE TO INFORM

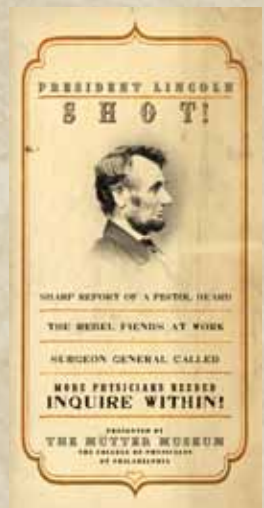

The College participated in Lincoln 200 events with an exhibit that featured historical medical instruments, specimens and books to illustrate how the fatally-wounded President would have received first aid, and how his autopsy would have been conducted.

We are seeking funding for a new permanent exhibition to launch in spring 2013, a year which marks the 150th anniversaries of both the battle of Gettysburg and the opening of the Mütter Museum. This exhibit will tell the story of Civil War-era medical care in the context of Philadelphia as a center of medical culture. The College’s collections are especially rich as many of our Fellows performed key roles during the Civil War including Henry Hollingsworth Smith, S. Weir Mitchell, John Neill, and William Fisher Norris.

As Robert D. Hicks, PhD, Director of the Mütter Museum & Historical Medical Library explains, the Mütter’s collection of extensively documented U.S. Civil War wounds still informs contemporary medicine: “Civil War injuries were quite traumatic. Minie balls, the huge lead bullets used back then, took away large areas of tissue and bone.” Homemade weapons used in recent warfare are producing similar injuries, causing today’s battlefield surgeons to take a closer look at historic Civil War injuries.

SPOTLIGHT: HEALTHCARE DURING THE RECESSION

In response to the increasing number of uninsured and financially struggling citizens, PhillyHealthInfo.org, the College's free consumer health resource, created a "Recession Healthcare Toolkit" page to connect individuals with hundreds of low cost health resources in the community, including free clinics, health screenings and reduced-cost medication programs.

In March, over 400 people registered for our free program "I'm Just Sick About It: The Economic Crisis and Its Impact on the Health and Health Care of Greater Philadelphia." The brown-bag lunch program was held in Mitchell Hall with a simulcast in adjoining Ashhurst Hall.

"I don't feel so alone."

PhillyHealthInfo.org partners with local organizations to provide free trainings to increase access to health information and community services. One frustrated parent expressed her feelings of isolation – "no one wants to hear about your disabled child" – at a recent training. After finding a free online support group on PhillyHealthInfo.org that connected her to other parents facing similar problems, she said, "I don't feel so alone!"

SPOTLIGHT: SCANNING SKULLS FOR NEW CLUES

The Mütter Museum began collaborating this past year with the University of Pennsylvania on a skull CAT scanning project. The scanning of the Hyrtl skulls augments the thousands of human and animal skeletons scanned at Penn, as well as collections from Columbia University and the American Museum of Natural History.

The Hyrtl skull collection is unique because it consists of skulls from a well-documented, known population from a specific time period and location. A wide array of ages, ethnicities and social backgrounds, and range of causes of death are represented in the collection.

As a result of the significant increase in visitor traffic over the years, the skulls are becoming damaged due to vibrations and unstable display mounts. Scanning the Hyrtl collection will allow virtual access to skeletal specimen data, and prevent further damage to the skulls. Additionally, we plan to have the skull mounts assessed by a conservator who will provide recommendations to address the stability of the specimens and help us to keep this highly popular collection on permanent display.
